

VEGAN, ORGANIC & BIODYNAMIC WINE

Product List | July 2019

Stock subject to availability and prices subject to change.

Organic, Vegan and Biodynamic wines are very much in demand and are globally available on restaurant wine lists and on the lists of good wine merchants too.

We hesitate to label them as 'alternative wines' - as they are not new, and are increasingly 'mainstream'.

At the Wright Wine Company, we stock over 500 vegan, organic and biodynamic wines from across the globe. You may well regularly drink one of these wines as they are from many well known vineyards - however the wine industry seldom makes large statements on their labels to let you know the fact.

There's an upside and downside to this. The upside is that many people may be enjoying a vegan or organic wine without knowing. The human brain can often give you preconceptions just from a label, and some of these may be negative.

The downside is of course that many people who choose veganism as a way of life, may feel they are limited in their wine choices. This isn't so. Just a flick through this list and you'll see that the options available are quite staggering.

Do organic/vegan/biodynamic wines taste differently?

That's a good question - and this debate could go on for more than we have space for. The best way to answer this is to try them and see for yourself. Unless you're an expert who regularly drinks wine and has the palate, and knowledge, to recognise subtle differences, we really don't think you would notice...

Read on to understand the process which define these wines - then take a look through our incredible range...

ORGANIC WINE

Organic wine is made from grapes grown in accordance with the principles of organic farming - that is, artificial chemical fertilisers, pesticides, fungicides and herbicides are not used. Instead, fertilisers of organic nature are used - compost manure, green manure and bone meal.

There are two core phases of wine making, so true organic wine would consider both elements in the process, however in some countries (UK included) just having the grapes grown organically will define the wine as 'organic'.

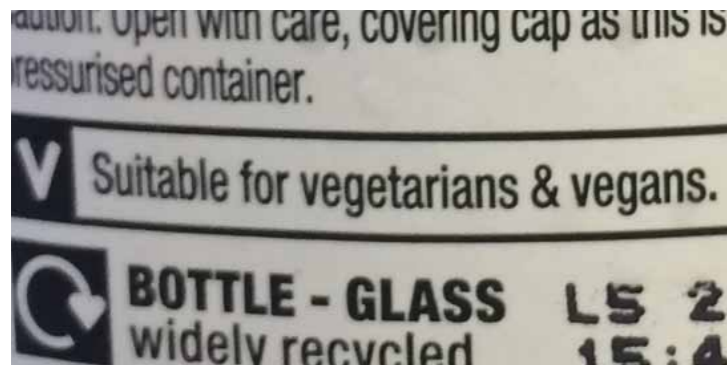

Ensuring the vineyard is maintained, and grapes grown, using organic principles is one thing - however in the fermentation and bottling of the product there are still processes which need to be considered. An example here are additives which support the preservation and stabilisation of the product, such as sulphites. Because many wines are at their best over a period of time, it's desirable for them to be preserved for longer - and there is therefore much debate in the wine making community about what defines an organic stabilisation/preservation age. Watch this space..

VEGAN WINE

The definition of Veganism¹ is a way of living that seeks to exclude (as much as possible and practical) all forms of exploitation of, and cruelty to, animals for food, clothing and any other purpose. More commonly, this would mainly focus on a plant-based diet which avoids all meat, including shellfish, fish and insects) dairy, eggs, honey - and animal-derived products.

Easier said than done. So where does wine come into this?

It may come as a surprise to some, but in the wine making (and brewing) processes, animal-derived products may be used to remove organic impurities and therefore improve the clarity and in some cases, flavour. This organic matter, which may be proteins and yeast, makes the wine cloudy and could give the illusion of the wine being spoilt. Removing the particles results in a clear wine.

Known as finings, this is an agent which is added to the top of a vat of wine. As it sinks through the liquid, organic particles adhere to it and are carried to the bottom where it can be removed. This residue is not bottled and generally will not make its way into the final product.

The problem is that fining can be derived from gelatin, egg albumen and in some cases in the Mediterranean, bull's blood (although this is not allowed in the US or EU due to BSE).

Vegan wine of course uses nothing which has come from an animal, with some vineyards preferring to let sediment settle naturally, and others preferring bentonite - a clay mineral, to clear their product. There are also some vineyards which will not filter their wine at all, as some people prefer unfiltered and say it may affect the flavour.

BIODYNAMIC WINE

Biodynamic farming is an ecological and sustainable approach to agriculture which increases soil fertility without the use of chemical fertilizers and pesticides. Using organic farming methods (see above) with the addition of soil supplements according to Rudolf Steiner's (Austrian philosopher, social reformer, architect, economist, esotericist) formulas and following a planting calendar which depends on astronomical configurations. This approach was first lectured by Steiner in 1924.

For a wine to be labelled as 'biodynamic' it has to meet the standards laid down by the Demeter Association which is an internationally recognised certifying body.

According to Fortune², many of the top estates in France, including the likes of Domaine Leroy in Burgundy, Château de la Roche-aux-Moines in the Loire, Maison Chapoutier in the Rhone Valley, and Domaine Zind-Humbrecht in Alsace, now follow biodynamic viticulture.

NATURAL WINE

There has been something of a buzz surrounding "Natural Wine" in recent years and, unlike Organic, Biodynamic and Vegan wine making principles, it is a rather nebulous term. At present there is no established certification body and the term has no legal status. Indeed "natural wine" is more of a wine making philosophy of minimal intervention in the growing and wine making processes than a scientific approach and, for this reason, opinions amongst "natural" wine makers often differ in terms of what they consider to be an acceptable level of intervention. It is also an approach that seems to divide consumer opinion.

Isabelle Legeron MW is a staunch advocate of "Natural Wine" and defines it on her RAW Wine website³ as:

"Natural Wine is farmed organically (biodynamically, using permaculture or the like) and made (or rather transformed) without adding or removing anything in the cellar. No additives or processing aids are used, and 'intervention' in the naturally occurring fermentation process is kept to a minimum. As such neither fining nor (tight) filtration are used. The result is a living wine - wholesome and full of naturally occurring microbiology."
